The post did not appear in the parade Wednesday as an Arlington post, as the number in attendance being so small; but the members participated in the march with some of the various departments.

The majority of the party left Boston Monday and returned Saturday, and report having passed a most enjoyable encampment week.

About 21,000 veterans were in line of march and about 200,000 visitors in the city during the encampment week.

H. Fermoye of this town, on the afternoon of Aug. 9. This cancels the rewards of $500 previously offered.

TRAPS FOR AMERICAN SOLDIERS.

Ingenious Devices of the Cunning Moros For the Destruction of Troops in the Philippines. *****

SERVING as an enlisted man through the Philippine War, I came across many odd trenches, barricades and blockades erected by the ingenious Filipinos, who always calculate these fortifications with a view of retreating from them in the event of being pushed by the American troops. But I never saw trenches and barricades of the order of those utilized by the cunning Moros.

The writer accompanied the first large expedition against the Moros, in April, and had an opportunity to observe the entrenching customs of the Moro soldier. There is on the Island of Mindanao what is known as the lake tribes, and these tribes, or part of them, are the tribes engaged in war with the Americans. The coast and river tribes are friendly, and many of the members of these tribes were hired by the American troops to carry rations and ammunition on all expeditions to the interior, where the lakes are located. The lakes are fine stretches of water, about thirty-five miles from Malabang.

We find barricades of all kinds across the roads to obstruct the progress of the troops. Trenches of varied styles are seen.

The sketch here, a cross section of one of these trenches, shows the device employed—a light bamboo covering. Earth is placed on the covering, and the passing troops are supposed to break through the top and tumble upon the sharpened bamboo points below. If the troops fell in upon these points serious results might follow, but care is used, and, as a rule, places of this kind are avoided.

We found many trenches arranged so that the occupants could keep up a continuous retreat and still remain under cover. A drawing of this scheme is presented. These trenches are made alongside the roads or trails, and, in addition, there are stone barricades piled at proper angles. The enemy is stationed at (d), for example, and maintains its fire upon the oncoming troops from this point until the proper time comes for making a retreat. Then the occupants retreat back to (c), and open fire; then back to (f), and so on as long as the trenches continue.

In this sketch the reader may observe a plan of a barricade which is built with the intention of giving a reception of bamboo points to any one jumping the same. It is frequently necessary to rush the trenches of the enemy, and the Moros know this, so that they prepare the back of the barricades with the sharpened points as indicated. The points do not show from the front, and the chargers are often unaware of the pricking points until they strike upon them. We found many barricades made entirely with the thorny undergrowth of the jungle. This substance possesses wirelike points, which tear the clothes and the skin. It is very difficult to force a passage through these obstructions, and the columns are delayed.

We had the artillery with us, and barricades built of ordinary stone could be shattered freely with these pieces. But the ingenious Moro finds a kind of sandstone in the hills with which he builds his barricade. This stone is just spongy enough to let a shell penetrate without breaking the material. The natives secure a sort of limelike product from the mountains with which they make a cementing material to erect the masonry.

The Moros are as ingenious as the Filipinos in the construction of trenches and barricades of the abundant bamboo of the country. Bamboo posts are placed in the earth at intervals. Then the necessary cross pieces of the same stock of smaller diameter are put through the uprights, and these cross pieces are interwoven with the divided or split bamboo. Then another partition is put up about three feet back and the space between packed with earth, sod, brush etc., resulting in a substantial barricade through which shot, as a rule, cannot pass.

All along the line of march to the lakes one would see a man, every now and then, fall straight forward, full length, throwing his rifle ahead of him. An examination of the path would show the trap (b), consisting of a single piece of thin bamboo, adjusted on little pegs, and set just high enough from the surface to trip anyone who was passing.

I never was in a country where the enemy displayed so much ingenuity in the setting of traps. I served as a soldier in Cuba, and have been at it three or four years in these islands, but not until I took the Moro trail to the lakes with the American expedition of April did I see arrows set to shoot out across the path near one when he tripped the raw hide or hempen cord. The Filipino had devices of this kind, but they did not always work, and the soldiers would play with the contrivances. But no one plays with the Moro path-shooting arrow gun, arranged as represented in the sketch. Here the arrow lays in the hollowed section or tube of bamboo, close to the surface, and this tube is fixed with a bow, as shown. The bowstring is hauled back, and connected to a trip clutch. This clutch is connected with a cord, which extends across the trail to a peg. As a man passes over the trail his toe catches the cord, the bow is let loose and the arrow flies.—From the Field, Isle de Mindanao, Philippine Islands.—New York Times.

"THE OLDEST HOUSE IN AMERICA."

There have been controversies regarding the location of the oldest house in America, but it is now agreed, says the New York Herald, that the landmark is situated in St. Augustine, Fla., on a tiny, narrow thoroughfare near the centre of the old city. It was built in 1564 by the monks of the Order of St. Francis. The whole of the solid structure is constructed of coquina, a combination of sea shells and mortar that is almost indestructible.

"GOD MONITOR."

Destruction of a Famous Beacon Rock on the Missouri.

A force of men cleaning the way for the roadbed of a railroad blasted away the other day the most historic rock on the Missouri River. The rock stood for centuries on a bluff just above the old town of Marion, Mo., where the new railroad crosses Monticau Creek. It was in the form of a pyramid, eighty feet high. One side resembled very much the head of a lion while the other was a well-defined likeness of a man.

There is a tradition among the old people of the neighborhood that this rock was once worshiped by the Indians who came each year to hold celebrations. They called it "God Monitor," from which the creek and county have acquired their names.

For centuries the rock stood there a beacon and guide for all kinds of river craft. How old it was no one can tell. It was observed by the first French explorers when they came up the river in 1705, and 100 years later Lewis and Clark saw and wrote descriptions of it.

The rock originally bore a queer painting, which probably was discernible as late as 100 years ago. The painting represented a frightful monster as large as a calf, which had horns like a deer, the face of a man, a body covered with scales and a tail like that of a fish. The work was crudely executed in colors which have long since been obliterated by the weather.

The earliest writer who is known to have mentioned the historic rock was de Anville, who described it in a journal written in 1752.—New York Sun.

What We Americans Read.

John Cotton Dana, of the Newark Free Library, has made the figures show that we read as follows: In one year the total number of daily, weekly and monthly copies of "periodicals" published in the United States is: Dailies, 2,865,466,000; weeklies, 1,208,190,000; monthlies, 263,452,000; total, 4,337,108,000 copies. He estimates that the annual output of these periodicals would make 2,000,000,000 copies of a book the size of one of the trashy novels of the day, that is to say, a book about eight by five and a half inches, containing 400 pages. About 10,000,000 new books are sold annually. Mr. Dana thinks, comprising 4500 titles, and in his opinion 40,000,000 of our population could read if they would. The annual output of the monthlies is set down at 285,000,000 copies.—New York Press.

The Sweetest of the Sweet.

A curious check was presented to the cashier of one of the Tonawanda banks recently. This check, which was for $10, was made payable to "the sweetest of the sweet," and was presented to the cashier in the ordinary way. The cashier, naturally startled by the unusual expression in the body of the check, asked in innocence: "Who is the 'sweetest of the sweet?'" "I am," replied the lady. "Kindly indorse it in that way," said the cashier. She did. And, as her husband's account warranted it, for, like a prudent man, he had not overdrawn it, "the sweetest of the sweet" received her money.—New York Tribune.

ARLINGTON

Owing to several unavoidable circumstances, including sickness and lack of sufficient reportorial force the ENTERPRISE has been delayed in making its appearance this week and its columns are not as newsy as we could wish. However our force will be enlarged next week and the paper will appear in the middle of the week.

The ENTERPRISE believes in the public schools. It believes that the free educational system of the country offers a privilege that no child should be deprived of within the age in which the law requires them to go to school. Cases have come to our attention where parents in an attempt to keep children from school to work for a meagerly pittance of wages have falsified the age of the child or evaded the questions of the enumerator and neglected to report a child within the ages. The parent who would do such, does the child the rankest kind of injustice, denying to the child the opportunity of a life time which comes only at this period of life to qualify him for enlightened manhood. This would be excusable in cases where the wages of the child were required to assist in the support of the family, but the cases wherein this is an actual necessity are extremely rare and it is this class that appreciate the value of education more than any other. The ENTERPRISE also believes that the man, company or corporation employing the services of any young person not a graduate of the free public high school, in any case where the wages are not actually needed by parents is a moral wrong to that person and the excuse that if he did not employ the person others would, is insufficient.

Speaking of schools, we wonder how many, even among thoughtful people, ever give much consideration to work of teachers. No work can be more wearing than instruction and discipline of a room full of children, but teachers rarely get any praise from parents, and in the largest proportion of the cases the parents know very little of what the teachers are doing for the pupils. If the best schools are wanted there is but one way to get them—the teachers must have the intelligent interest and hearty co-operation of parents. They are entitled to it.

We may enjoy the beauty of virgin nature in secluded forests when we climb mountains, but the gratification become tiresome when we find nobody to share it, observes a writer in the Review of Reviews. Even Mr. Burroughs has been obliged sometimes to content himself with the company of his faithful dog. A comrade is always welcome, but not indispensable, in streets, where the pleasure of exercise is heightened by ever-changing sights and sounds. The most harmonious cries of street venders are less sweet than the melodies of singing birds; flowers that greet us from windows of houses lack the fragrance of nature. But I consider the melodious chimes of city churches preferable to the thunder of Niagara, and the friendly look of a charming woman to the vista from Pike's Peak. Dickens found in every street of London a subject worthy of description by his marvelous pen; personal observation enabled Victor Hugo to delineate the old streets of Paris, as if he had lived at the time of Quasimodo.

Roumania has lately put in force a new labor law which carries one back to medieval times, when guilds were all powerful among artisans. Under this new act no one will be allowed to work at a handicraft unless he has obtained a certificate from one of the guilds which are established by the law. These are to be under the supervision of the local chambers of commerce, and will be required to establish insurance funds, to maintain labor registries, and to found adult technical schools. The guilds must issue certificates to all who show satisfactory knowledge of their trades, and have also to nominate two workmen and two employers to act with a representative of the Government as a Board of Conciliation. The most important clause of the new law encourages associations of workmen on the lines that have worked well in Italy and New Zealand. These associations of Roumanian workmen are to have the right to deposit as security only half of the amount required of private firms tendering for Government work.

The Des Moines Register and Leader remarks that Newgate, happily, is one of the few surviving prisons of the olden time, and now it, too, is to disappear. It is a long and dreary way between these prisons of the older time and those of to-day, in which punishment is based on the ideas of public safety and the cure of certain moral obliquities, for which it is held the individual is not wholly responsible. The old prisons were starting places for the guillotine and the gallows; the new are sought to be made a starting place for a better life.

London is not necessarily "behind the times" because her fire department is without a fire-escape above eighty feet and has no water-towers. A London building more than seventy feet high is rare.

Careful tending and nurturing on the part of the beekeeper has resulted in increasing the bee's tongue one-hundred of an inch. The natural length is about one-twentieth of an inch, but clever keepers, by having only bees with unusually long tongues, have produced a variety with the added length, which enables them to extract more honey from the flowers in a given time than their short-tongued relatives.

Greenman of Watertown and the benediction was pronounced by Mr. Reed. Other clergymen who assisted were Rev. Edward Hale of Cambridge and Rev. Charles A. Allen of Waverley.

The St. Joseph's Social and Benevolent society gave a whist and dance last Thursday evening which proved a most successful and enjoyable affair. Whist was played until 10 o'clock. Afterward the floor was cleared for dancing which was participated in until a late hour by the large number of young people present.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER'S HEARING.

The county commissioners gave a hearing here Monday on the widening of Trapelo road, from the railroad track to the Waltham line. Very little opposition developed, although the general sentiment seemed to be that the road should be widened on the north, where the Massachusetts general hospital owns the land, rather than on the south, where there are many houses. After the hearing the commissioners visited the ground.

The strip of road in question is about half a mile in extent. At the last town meeting the Boston Elevated Railway company was granted a location provided the road could be widened. The laying of the tracks will connect the elevated with the terminals of the Boston & Concord and the Waltham street railways, both of which end at the boundary line between Waltham and Belmont.

WAVERLEY LOCALS.

Construction has already begun on an addition to the administration building of the Massachusetts school for the feeble minded here. This is necessary because of the need for more room for the employees of the institution, and the addition, which is from plans by William Gibbons Preston of Boston, will practically double the capacity of the building.

Quite an exciting accident occurred on Trapelo road last Saturday evening when an electric car collided with a baker's team near Hawthorn street. The wagon was thrown several feet from the track, and making a half-turn, landed on its side upon the horse, while the bread and pastry with which the cart was filled, flew in all directions. Happily no great damage was done and the baker and the car soon started on their respective ways.

The Rev. Sam. Eliot, of the Bulfinch Place church, Boston, preached last Sunday at the Waverley Unitarian church to a small but appreciative audience. The Rev. Charles A. Allen will occupy the pulpit next Sunday.

Miss Holmes is the guest of her brother, David Holmes, this week.

Rev. H. P. Smith and son, Paul, who have been at Washington the past week, returned last Thursday, after a delightful trip. Mr. Smith was a delegate to the National Federation of Patriotic societies, and spoke on "Our National Greatness and Our Peril."

WHITE HOUSE INVITATIONS.

Expert Penmen Who Write the Names
on the Cards.

The preparation of invitations to the four great social events of the season at the White House—the receptions of the president—is a work that requires great care and the most expert penmanship. The several thousand people who receive invitations to each of the four receptions necessarily notice the attractive and beautiful penmanship, amounting almost to engraving. This work is done by some of the most noted penmen in the service of the United States government.

The cards of invitation to each reception are engraved, and contain blanks for the name of the person or persons invited. These blanks are filled in by the penmen. During the social season just closed two penmen were engaged in writing the names on the cards, while two others wrote the addresses on the envelopes containing
the cards, while two others wrote the beautifully is a profession, and frequently those invited to a reception would wonder whether the name was engraved or written. This work was done by J. L. McGrew, a clerk in the Navy Department; S. E. Sullivan of the Postoffice Department; W. W.
Mortimer of the Interior Department,
and E. L. Kimmel of the treasury.

The four men, aided by two stenographers and typewriters, worked under the supervision of Thomas H.
Netherland of the White House force, himself a noted expert in writing. For three or four years Mr. Netherland has had charge of the invitations to these receptions, and his work has been so satisfactory as to receive the heartly commendation of Secretary Cortelyou. Mr. Netherland occasionally does some of the writing himself, but his duty consists in seeing to the preparation and distributions of the invitations, to the care of the list of those invited, and to the thousand and one other things that come before him. He dictates the answers to the requests for invitations and superintends the making up of the lists. The lists are kept from year to year, and Mr. Netherland knows just who were invited to receptions in other years and who were refused invitations. He is a kind of walking encyclopaedia of the social and political standing and affiliations of Washington and other people. He is so discreet that never a word escapes his mouth about his duties, and whatever he has to say is put before his chief, Secretary Cortel-you, who is responsible for the way in which the work is done.

The work of writing the invitations is frequently begun weeks ahead of the time fixed. Certain classes of people are invited to every reception,
and their invitations can be written and put aside ready for delivery when others are made out.

The handwriting experts are not usually fast penmen. Swiftmess and beauty of writing are seldom found together, and so the experts take time
in affixing the names of society people to cards and envelopes. All of the four men engaged the last season were assigned from other departments, and Mr. Netherland is the only one belonging permanently on the White House rolls.—Washington Star.

Old Worlds and New Ones.

We must look to the solar system
for examples of stars in the last stage of development. Each of the planets may in fact be regarded as an object of this kind. The bare and rocky surface of the moon affords a desolate picture of what may result from this long-continued process of condensation. The volcanic region which is shown to excellent advantage in a photograph recently taken with the Yerkes telescope, gives no evidence of the existence of life; in fact, the spectroscope indicates that if there is any air on the moon it is much too rare to support life as we know it.

Fortunately, the moon is not the only example of a worn-out star. The earth, which probably has many counterparts in the universe, is another example of a less desolate kind. Here

through the process of condensation
which is the chief cause of celestial phenomena has ceased, the problem of evolution has not ended. In fact, through the cosmical problems which we have considered in their barest elements will not be completely solved for centuries, it may be truly said that the questions raised by the countless living organisms in a single drop of ditch water are still more complex, and will require a still longer time for their solution.—Popular Science Monthly.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

A widower of Wellington, Kan., the other day was remarried just two weeks after his first wife's death, and when the boys came to charivari him he went out and told them that they ought to be ashamed of themselves for making such an uproar around a house where a funeral had been held so recently.

Tokio has been destroying rats
wholesale as a preventive measure against the plague. This disturbed the religious scruples of Umatario Ne-gal of Akasaka-ken and he began to see rats at night. To get rid of the dreams he has spent $1000 in building a stone pillar twelve feet high and six feet thick, in honor of the spirits of the killed rats.

An ingenious method of obtaining a reputation for patriotism cheaply
has been invented by certain Berlin publicans. On their shop fronts they hang legions to this effect: "So long as the war in South Africa lasts I for bid any Englishman to enter my premises." The use of this placard is,
it is said, entirely confined to houses
of a class that never entertained an Englishman in the course of their existence.

The American opossum is one of the most curious animals living in the United States. It is the only one that carries its young in a pouch like the kangaroo. It is the only animal that can feign death perfectly. It is remarkable for hanging by its tail like a monkey. It has hands resembling those of a human being. Its snout is like a hog's, while its mouth is liberally furnished with teeth. Its eyes are like a rat's, and it hisses like a snake.

A. G. Webster reported to the American Physical society in New York City recently the results of experiments on a singular difference in the audibility of sound when passing over water and over grass. Under similar conditions of quietness it was found that a given sound could be heard almost exactly four times as far over water as over grass. The assumption that water is a perfect reflector and grass a complete absorber of sound waves is not, Mr. Webster says, sufficient to explain the phenomenon.
The practical importance of knowing this peculiarity, where sound may have to be sent across a grassy plain,
is evident.

Sarah Fisher, a character of the country-side, of Hampshire, Eng., has just died at the age of 90 years. She lived in a cottage by herself, and spent nearly all her time in the open air.
Every day, no matter what the weather was, she tramped about the country, wandering miles away from her home. Twice a week she called at Sir Robert Wright's house at Headley Park, where she received a basin of soup and plenty of "victuals" to take away with her. She called at a neighbor's house the evening before she died to get a loaf which the baker
had brought, and left to go home across the fields. Missing her way she fell into a ditch, and there her body was found the next morning.

RINGS AND ELECTRICITY.

A Combination That Gave a Denver Woman a Startling Shock.

The diamond engagement and plain band wedding rings on the third finger of the left hand of Mrs. Clara Banker formed the connecting link of a complete circuit for an electrical current when she attempted to turn off an incandescent light, and almost caused her death by electrocution. Although she escaped with her life, through a wonderful exhibition of feminine presence of mind, her left hand was very badly burned by the current and a large piece of flesh torn from the inside of the little finger.

Mrs. Banker is the wife of L. E. Banker, manager of the Gano company, and resides at 2205 East Colfax avenue.

When Mrs. Banker attempted to grasp the button to turn off the light, the rings came in contact with the brass casings surrounding the upper part of the globe. In an instant she felt the effects of the current, and when she attempted to jerk her hand away she found she could not remove it. She attempted to pull her left hand from the globe by using her right hand to jerk with, but was unsuccessful. By that time, Mrs. Banker says, her entire left side began to grow numb, and she threw herself backward with all her force. The sudden jerk released her hand from the incandescent light fixture and broke the current. Mrs. Banker threw herself with such force that she fell against the door two feet behind her, cracking one of the panels.

The effect of the current going through the woman's body, almost completely un-nerved her, and for several hours she required constant attention. When she jerked her hand from the light fixture a large piece of flesh from the inside of the little finger was torn away. The other fingers and palm of the hand were badly burned, the flesh looking as though it had been cooked with carbolic acid.—Rocky Mountain News.

HOW AN OYSTER CATCHES RATS.

The Trick Easily Accomplished by an Intelligent Bivalve.

An oyster as a rat trap is a new role in which a large and muscular bivalve has recently appeared as a valuable occupant of the basement of a downtown restaurant.

In the damp and dark cellar, where this particular oyster has made his home since being dragged out of his damper bed a few weeks ago, and brought along to Richmond with a whole barrel of less intelligent oysters, there dwells a colony of rats, who have eaten oysters for so many generations that the ears of the young rats of the strain have become hard like miniature oyster shells, and upon close examination, their tails are found to be growing hard and will, no doubt, be used by the posterity of this colony of oyster openers. These discoveries prove, beyond any doubt, the remarkable influence of habit and diet upon the physical development of rats and would be given due consideration at this time, but for this more unusual phenomena in nature history of a rat-catching oyster, which is to be written about just now.

This oyster story is vouched for by "Albert," the colored man behind the free lunch counter at the Commercial hotel, who is an authority on bivalves not to be disputed. This oyster was a death trap for rats, and his operations were in the nature of a revelation among those who had always regarded oysters as old and dead shells, containing a very delicious morsel, which was to be had without any risk to life or limb.

This oyster had a habit of feeding just as other oysters, but after he had partaken of the meal and salt, a mighty poor substitute in the opinion of an oyster for the delicacies washed ashore from the sea's depth to his ocean-brink home, he would usually, when not asleep, have his shells open and notice things and his surroundings in the dark and mysterious basement. Among the first things he saw when his eyes became accustomed to the dim light of this strange prison were rats, and as he noticed them eat the heart out of his silent companions when they had been so careless as to go asleep with their mouths open, he resolved then he would lie and wait for Mr. Rat to come his way.

The time wasn't long before the chance was offered, and the oyster, who had become quite restless and felt the absence of legs for the first time in his life, proved equal to the occasion. The rat approached with great assurance of an easy work, as he found his intended victim with his shell wide open. Settling upon his hind legs before the pearl-lined disk, Mr. Rat raised his chin, stretched his short neck, and reached in for his meal. As he did so the oyster closed up on him, catching both front feet in the clamp, and the music began. The rat squealed and jumped at such a lively rate, dragging the oyster over the basement floor, that "Albert" rushed into the domains of these imprisoned and probably dumb creatures with some amazement. He found the rat caught fast in the oyster's grip, and though Mr. Rat made an awful squeaking noise, the oyster didn't open his mouth.

The rat had dragged the oyster to his hole, and backed into it, but the shell was too large to enter and there the prisoner was held.—Richmond Times.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

According to the traditions, about 2000 people perished in the destruction of Pompeii. The excavators have found 286 human skeletons and those of nine horses and five dogs.

Divers are able to converse under water by placing their helmets, which are invariably made of copper, together, and shouting to one another. The sound, they say, is swiftly and distinctly conveyed.

It was William Pitt who originated the income tax in Great Britain, in 1798, as a war tax. The Napoleonic wars were fought with it. From that time to this it has been the resort of all ministers to meet war expenditures.

The combined age of four brothers of the Bastien family of Galena, Ill., is 343 years; of the four brothers and two sisters, 508 years, the youngest of them being 77, and the oldest 93 years old. They are all in good health, and live within a radius of two miles of each other.

The foundations of a Roman villa have been laid bare in Greenwich park, London, by the park keeper. The space opened has an area of about 16 feet, and the only loose materials found, so far, are some tiles. The discovery is regarded with great interest by local authorities.

The earliest known hot water heating is curiously traced to Greenland, where the strangely forgotten colony of Norwegians had increased to 190 villages in the 14th century. A German author was told in 1516 of the heating and cooking by water in pipes from a hot spring. The ruins of the colony were located in 1723, and the hot spring was some years ago seen by an American artist.

Two remarkable historical relics have lately come under the auctioneer's hammer in Europe. At the Falkenhayn sale in Vienna the pen used by Czar Alexander I., Emperor Francis II., and King Frederick William III. of Prussia to sign the "Holy Alliance" treaty was sold for $160. In London the pale blue silk undershirt that King Charles I. took off and gave to his doctor before stepping upon the scaffold, brought $1022.

A Valuable View.

A story is told of a man in Massachusetts who sold a scrubby farm for $12,000 although its value was not more than $1000. "How did you do it?" a friend asked him. "Well," he replied, "I had $1000 worth of farm and $11,000 worth of view."

A PLENTITUDE OF DEER AND MOOSE IN THE MAINE WOODS.

Sportsmen Now Flocking Thither.

The law is now off; the signal has sounded with the advent of October, and thousands of sportsmen are planning and preparing for a tour in the Maine woods.

Already the crack of the rifle has resounded and the chase is on; the fleet-footed deer and the raging, snorting moose go crashing through the brush, disturbed by this sudden noise and unlooked for intrusion; startled they are, but naturally inquisitive they soon become the victims of the changed conditions which October brings in.

In these dense forests where the only stir of life at this season is the drum of the partridge or the foot-falls of the denizens which inhabit these jungles, the ardent sportsman now enters, the smoking campfire and occasional bang of the gun being the only tell-tale signs of his habitation.

Arriving at his destination, wherever it may be, possibly a long ride in a rickety buckboard over country roads to some choice camping spot selected by an almost infallible guide; maybe it is some distant island in an inland lake reached by a delightful paddle in the canoe; or perhaps it lies close to the railroad station, a registered camp or an up-to-date hotel, where the hunter is not obliged to rough it; it matters not, wherever his stopping place, the preparations are the same—first a hearty meal and a good night's rest. Awakening in the morning in the fresh October sunshine and the bracing atmosphere of the pine forests, the hunter will feel equal for any task, and the search for big game is then on in earnest.

If the quest is for deer, then a mistake cannot be made in location, for deer in abundance can be found in any portion of Maine. In that famous fishing section the "Moosehead Lakes," where the disciples of "Isaac Walton" love to gather, the nimrod will find an equal plentitude of deer, and the same in the Rangeley and Dead River regions.

As two deer are all that anyone is allowed to carry out of the state, then the man who knows how to shoot at all is pretty sure of his legal allotment.

The moose hunter, however, requires just a little more patience, a certain supply of skill and a goodly amount of caution, and his efforts will be repaid with thrilling and exciting adventure. These animals, which in recent years have increased under the protection of the Maine game laws, now roam the northern portions of the state in large numbers, and in 1901 the Bangor & Aroostook railroad shipped 259 moose over its line; and this, together with the large number which were killed for consumption in camp, and those that fell a prey to the hunter's quarry in other portions of the state, gives evidence of the plentitude of this specie of game.

If you desire to engage in moose hunting, the services of a trained guide are almost indispensable, for, although the Katahdin, Aroostook and Washington county sections of Maine are known to be good moose territories, there are particular romping places and feeding spots where they gather in large numbers, and these places are known only to the experienced guide or woodsman.

While the excitement of moose hunting is generally of a nature to please the average sportsman, still the more zealous hunter can take a try at the savage forms of forest quadrupeds if he desires to venture into the interior of the Penobscot and Washington county regions. Wild-cats and loup-cerviers are often encountered, and many a wild-cat's hide from Maine finds its way annually to a New York or Boston market.

The berry section and orchards around Washington county are overrun with bears, which at this season of the year are fattening at the farmer's expense in anticipation of the long winter's siege; and the sportsman who brings his shot-gun will find awaiting him small game and birds of quantity and variety to suit the most fastidious taste—rabbits, squirrels, beaver, etc., grouse, quail, partridge, ducks, pigeons, and a score of others.

And, hold! Who knows but what "Diana" will favor you with the good fortune to catch a glimpse of the giant of the "Pine Tree Forests," the famous "White Moose," which, according to the estimate of persons who have seen him, weighs 2500 pounds and has antlers measuring 12 feet across. This animal has been seen several times in the past few years by guides and lumbermen. He first made his appearance in 1893, and since then has been seen several times, each time in a different section of Maine. He is a rare prize and he has never been shot at with either camera or rifle.

Even if you are not a sportsman, you will enjoy a trip in the wilds of Maine at this season of the year. The sharp and exhilarating ozone which permeates this region saturated with the fragrance of the pine and spruce will do much to invigorate and rejuvenate the worn out body and the tired mind.

In a beautifully illustrated booklet called "Fishing and Hunting," published by the General Passenger Department, Boston & Maine Railroad, Boston, the game section of Maine is delightfully detailed and pictured. This book will be mailed upon receipt of two-cents in stamps.

NOTED PAINTINGS

The splendid series of paintings which the Boston Sunday Journal has been reproducing and distributing to its readers has been added to by some recent selections by members of its art staff, and during the next few months some of the most noted of modern paintings will be reproduced in their original colors and given free to every buyer of the Boston Sunday Journal.

In addition to this, the Journal has resumed its publication of the bound magazine which with its splendid stories and departments, illustrated with the most artistic copper-plate cuts, furnishes a feature not obtainable with any other Sunday paper in New England.

These two expensive and attractive features are in addition to the complete newspaper which the Journal issues every Sunday, a newspaper justly popular for the brilliancy of its writer and the care and attention given to its editing.

It will be gratifying to Asthmatic readers to learn that an absolute cure has at last been discovered by Dr. Schiffmann. Y., who says: "Your remedy (Schiffmann's Asthma Cure) is the best I ever used. I bought a package of our druggist and tried it and one box entirely cured me of Asthma, and I have not had it since. I can now go to bed and sleep all night with perfect comfort, which I have not done before for 35 years and I thank you for the health that I now enjoy. I hope that you will publish this letter, that others may learn of its wonderful virtues."

GOLDEN WEDDING.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Spencer Celebrate the Anniversary of Their Marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Spencer celebrated the 50th anniversary of their marriage, Monday evening, at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Herbert G. Locke, on Hancock street. The reception was informal and very pleasant. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer were assisted in receiving by their son, Mr. W. H. Spencer and his wife, Mr. Reid, Mrs. Locke and Miss Locke. Several of their grand nieces and grand nephews assisted as ushers.

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. George W. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. George O. White, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Doe, of Lexington, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Burns of Wilton, N. H., Mr. and Mrs. Brown and Mr. George Whitney of Somerville, Mr. and Mrs. John Whitney of Brookline and Judge F. T. Lawton and Miss Lawton of Lowell.

The gifts were choice and elegant, among them being a purse of gold from Mrs. Spencer's brothers, a beautiful and costly rug from her sister, a gold headed cane for Mr. Spencer and a solid silver coffee-pot for Mrs. Spencer, from their children and grandchildren. A basket of coal created a choice bit of diversion and a subject for many pleasant jokes.

The rooms were decorated with ferns and chrysanthemums and an orchestra discoursed music during the reception and supper.

Mr. and Mrs. Spencer are natives of Wilton, N. H. Mrs. Spencer was Miss Whiting. They were married by the Rev. Dr. Saltmarsh at Wilton 50 years ago. They resided in Boston many years, where Mr. Spencer was engaged in the grocery business before retiring several years ago.

LEXINGTON LOCALS.

A whist party was given at the Old Belfrey club Monday evening.

A demonstration of the "Lawson Pink" brand of canned goods is the attraction at H. W. Taylors grocery and provision store this week. It is in charge of Miss Lillian Bullock, formerly of this town.

The seventh annual ball of Division 34, A. O. H. was held in the Town hall, this Wednesday evening.

James McCarthy of Woburn street will soon enter Boston University.

B. F. Horsfield, after being confined to the house about two weeks with malaria, is much improved.

Speaking of depredations of Frank Conlins' cows on the choice garden truck of Wm. Kendall into whose garden they strayed last week one paper says that the field drivers Messrs. A. S. Chapman and C. E. Wheeler "pounded" the cattle and it cost Frank $23.72 for costs and damages. The latter may be correct, but those who know the field drivers personally scout the idea that they would pound dumb animals.

Owing to the scarcity of coal, many people of Lexington and vicinity are cooking with gas or kerosene oil and having their bread and rolls supplied to them from Jannelle & Co's. ovens. Their goods cannot be detected from domestic bread by those of the most acute taste and where orders are sent in time they deliver regularly in time for breakfast or supper.

There are several changes in the time table of the Boston and Maine railroad this week. Note the changes and paste them in your hat.

No Relief for Guam.—A conference was held at the navy department recently between Acting Secretary Darling and Capt. William Swift of the naval general board, for the purpose of devising some means for affording relief to the people in Guam, left destitute by the destructive earthquake of Sept. 22. Mr. Darling and Capt. Swift found that while there was enough money available to rebuild the buildings on the naval reservation in the island, there was not a cent authorized for relief measures, and it will probably be necessary to await an appropriation by congress to aid the destitute. The inability to afford relief is particularly embarrassing to the naval authorities on account of the contrast it presents to the promptness with which the United States sent food, clothing and other supplies to the sufferers of the Martinique earthquake. The contrast is made greater by the fact that Guam is a possession of the United States, while Martinique is owned by France. The inability of the navy department to do anything will be brought to the attention of the president, in the hope that he may be able to make an allotment from the contingent fund at his disposal.

SIMPKINS'S HOROSCOPE.

Simpkins had ideas, but none of them seemed to be worth much. At least they had brought him in very little revenue, and if revenue is not the test of value what is?

Every now and then Simpkins would think of something new, and if it did not happen to be supplanted in his mind by something newer he would exploit it. He had exhibited a good deal, off and on, and yet success seemed to elude him.

Unlike most persons who have ideas Simpkins was never discouraged. Probably that was because his ideas were not grand, all-absorbing ones, such as occur only once or twice in a lifetime, but simply—well, notions that come and go like waves lapping on a beach.

Simpkins was not rich, but he had desires that way. That was one of the reason why he had so many ideas. He was always planning schemes which seemed to hold out possibilities of wealth, and the ideas were notions intended to help him along.

Reading some country papers one day—which had been brought back by the boarder who had been away on his holidays—Simpkins was struck by the number of advertisements of persons who dealt in the future—readers of horoscopes, interpreters of signs, decipherers of palms. The advertise ments generally read something like this:

YOUR HOROSCOPE CAST.

Send us the date of your birth, (day month and year,) and we will tell you what you may expect in life. Careful readings made by the most expert interpreters of the Science of the Occult. Any three questions you may ask will be answered for a nominal charge of 12 cents—ten cents and a postage stamp—and a full reading given for a fee of $1.

Here seemed to be something new, and Simpkins determined to look into it. Not that he wished his own future told, interesting as that might be, but he thought that perhaps he could make something out of telling others. Evidently there was money in it, else why would so many be engaged in the business? True, the fees looked a little small. Still, in the aggregate, they might mount up, and anyway he must take conditions as he found them.

So Simpkins set himself to the study of the occult. He paid daily visits to the Astor Library and searched through old tomes on the influences of the heavens. For he was honest—in a way—was Simpkins, and he had no notion of taking money without giving some return.

Having thus at length versed himself in the science of horoscopy, Simpkins inserted advertisements in the rural papers. They were very much like those which had attracted his own attention, and offered to answer three questions for 10 cents, an unlimited number for a dollar, and soon Simpkins was doing a brisk business. From the data in the letters he was casting horoscopes and reading futures with a zeal and an enthusiasm proportioned to the prospect of much wealth and the temporary novelty of the occupation. Incidentally Simpkins was becoming interested in his correspondents—particularly those of the fair and gentle sex. They wrote such confiding, candid letters, full of little confidences and tender pleadings, that the sympathetic heart of Simpkins was touched. Here was one, for instance, which reached him on the very first day of his new enterprise:

My Dear Mr. Simpkins: I enclose you at once $1 for a complete reading, not waiting to test your abilities, of which I have every confidence, by a preliminary three questions. I have for some time been contemplating the subject of matrimony. Let me hasten to add that as yet my affections are centred on no one. The point on which I wish to consult you is this: At the time of my birth the planet Jupiter was ascendant. (I have been told this at least.) Jupiter having thus influenced my nativity, I suppose I have a "jovial" nature—indeed, I am sure of it. Now, what kind of a husband ought a "jovial" girl to have? The reason I am so anxious for disinterested advice—as yours must be—is that I am possessed of considerable wealth in my own right, and fear that some of my suitors may not be uninfluenced by mercenary motives. Very sincerely yours.

AMELIA R. DOBSON.

Here was something which gave Simpkins another of those ideas for which, as has been stated, he was famous. Why not himself try to win the fair—but here is the letter itself, which he wrote in reply:

My Dear Miss Dobson: I have read your letter with interest, and have made a careful examination of the influences which prevailed at the time of your nativity. You are quite correct in saying that the planet Jupiter was in a preponderant position, and that your nature should therefore be a pleasant and amiable one—"jovial," in fact. To be happily married your husband should be, I should say, of medium build and fairly tall, light, rather than dark, complexion, about five even six, years your senior and of a disposition not radically different from your own. As you are wealthy, the chances of a happy marriage would be greatly augmented were your husband to be comparatively poor. I am yours very truly, etc.

In which description those who knew Simpkins could not fail to recognize that astrologer himself, even to the last particular of being poor.

By just what steps Simpkins ultimately succeeded in obtaining the acquaintance of Miss Dobson it is not necessary to relate. Let it be stated, though, that when the acquaintance came it was in an altogether proper form, and that Simpkins was regularly introduced by a mutual friend, though the friendship, it is true, was not of long standing.

Now, Simpkins, thought an astrologer, was also a diplomatist, and he had no intention that Miss Dobson should connect him with the Simpkins whom she had consulted with regard to a suitable husband. So he refrained from mentioning the little circumstance, and as for talking about horoscopes, why, had the subject been mentioned he would have pretended not to know what the term meant.

Miss Dobson was an altogether pleasant and rather attractive young lady, and Simpkins soon found that he was beginning to like her quite apart from any mercenary considerations of her wealth. So he became a frequent visitor at the Dobson house, and having in the meantime experienced some twinges of conscience regarding the morality of accepting money for casting horoscopes had gradually abandoned the occult entirely.

Things in this way were proceeding swimmingly, and Simpkins' latest idea gave promise of at last being worth something. Miss Dobson apparently was not indifferent to her new acquaintance—perhaps it was because she recognized in him the physical qualities pointed out to her by the soothsayer—light complexion, slim, fairly tall, poor.

It may have been because of this latterst which she took in him that Miss Dobson one evening asked Simpkins:

"Mr. Simpkins, in what month were you born?"

And Simpkins, unsuspectingly, and following his custom of speaking the truth when there seemed to be no reason not to, replied: "September." "September!" echoed Miss Dobson. "The month of Saturn! Why, you must be of a saturnine nature, Mr. Simpkins. My, my, how unfortunate! Do you always feel gloomy? Do you know, I consulted an astrologer a short time ago, and he told me I needed the society of some one cheerful. I was almost beginning to think that you were cheerful, but I must have been mistaken."

And Simpkins, protesting that there was nothing in signs, and that astrology was a myth, realized that his case was hopeless.

Next week Simpkins had a brand-new idea. He is working on it now. It has nothing to do with horoscopes. —New York Times.

A GOOD DEAL.

Hiram Stout Accidentally Made Money for His Father.

Old man stout was well aware that his son Hiram didn't have sense enough to carry an umbrella when it was raining but he gave him a job in the store, as the boy didn't seem to have brains enough to hold a job down for a stranger. The old man did not attract besides keeping the store, and was a pretty shrewd fellow. He used to look at Hiram, frown and wander away, wondering what his son was in the world for.

On the other hand Hiram thought he was a pretty bright light, and just a few notches ahead of the other boys in the village. He had no more idea of the value of goods than a monkey wrench, and the knowing ones often had a great deal of sport with him. Whenever there was a lack of entertainment they would say: "Let's go down and have some fun with Hiram."

One day old man Stout had to go out of town on business and left the store in charge of Hiram. He went away with considerable misgiving as he didn't know what funny breaks his son might make while he was absent. Among the first to come in the store after the old man left was a drummer. He knew all about Hiram, and when he learned that the old man was away he determined to jolly him along for an order. Hiram thought a good deal of himself, but after the drummer had thrown him a few nicely worded compliments he imagined that he was the only one left in the town.

The traveling man was selling nails, and of course Hiram pretended that he knew all about them. The drummer convinced him that he needed some more stock, and finally asked: "How many do you want, Mr. Stout?"

Hiram reflected a moment and then took a chance. "I guess you had better send me three carloads."

This almost took the drummer's breath as there were not more than a thousand pounds of nails sold at the store in a year. But he said nothing, and rushed the order in before it could be countermanded.

Well, when the old man came home and heard about what Hiram had done the language he used was simply awful. He called Hiram everything and acted in the most fearful manner. But that night word came that the McKinley tariff bill had passed and the price of nails had doubled. The nail firm wrote asking Stout to countermand his order, but he refused. He got the three carloads of nails, and in the end made a big amount of money on the investment.

It was the only good break that Hiram ever made.—Pittsburg Press.

London's Railway Prisons.

One can never be certain of keeping an engagement if a journey on one of the London suburban lines is a necessary part of the business. The railway companies treat passengers as if their time was not their own. One is literally a prisoner in a railway compartment. There seems to be an absolute and really impudent indifference as to keeping to the advertised time.—Bradford Observer.

A man who's in debt doesn't have to worry as much as the man who wants to be and can't.
